Website:

This book titled “Flipped Gender Equity Education” is one of the first books in Taiwan which explores issues such as “gender and love”, “gender and physical image”, “gender and identity”, “gender and workplace”, “gender and internet”, “gender and violence”, and “gender and marriage” via flipped classroom concept. Twenty-nine life stories are used for in-class case studies and discussions to showcase how gender is not only personal in everyday life but also political regarding every public policy. The book also adopts “problem-based” approach and project-based “strategy interwoven with four parts: theme, case study, Q & A, and theory and concept analysis. One of the highlights of this class is a mid-term assignment which requires all students to engage in and report their “mimic-dating practice” and gender-related playwright to facilitate their gender empathy. The book is suitable for general education course from high school to universities.
